What is the MBSR Program?
The Mindfulness Based Stress Reduction (MBSR) is part of SAMHSA’s National Registry of Evidence-based Program and Practices that was first developed by Dr. Jon Kabat-Zinn in 1979 at the University of Massachusetts Medical Center. Since then it has been featured on Bill Moyer’s PBS documentary series (1993) - Healing and the Mind, in the Time and Newsweek as well as in numerous research studies in medicine, psychology and neuroscience. Dr. Jon Kabat-Zinn also wrote the book - Full Catastrophe Living, which describes the MBSR Program in detail.

What does the program involve?
The MBSR course is an 8-week, nine session program. Participants attend a 2.5-hour class once a week for eight weeks and one full day session. The program involves mindfulness meditation training and practice, yoga and body awareness training, exploration of patterns of thinking, feeling and action, brief lectures and group discussions.

Who is it for?
Mindfulness training is useful for a broad range of people with diverse backgrounds, ages, interests and levels of well-being. People self-refer or are referred by their doctors or therapists because of physical and emotional stressors in their lives. Many enroll because, although they are feeling well physically, they say the pace of their lives is "out of control" or they're "just not feeling quite right" and want more ease and peace.

How does it work?
Over the eight-week program, participants learn skills that allow them to become aware of their experience in the present moment. The course provides an opportunity to examine and reflect on the patterns of one’s own mind, feelings and actions, and to gently interrupt patterns of self-criticism and unhelpful actions. We learn how to accept and embrace the full range of experience that life inevitably brings.
